2010 DECANTER WORLD WINE AWARDS

The Decanter World Wine Awards unveiled a record number of entries this morning, as it announced the results of the 2010 competition. The results were announced to the wine trade at the London International Wine Fair at the ExCeL centre in London's Docklands. A total of 10,983 wines were entered, more than double the number of entries to the first competition seven years ago. There had been earlier concerns that the numbers might be down due to natural disasters in Chile, Madeira and Turkey. But the surprise bumper result confirmed the Decanter World Wine Awards as the largest international consumer wine competition. In total, 68.8% of wines submitted received an award – with 11.9% being awarded Silver medals while 2.86% won a Gold or Regional trophy. Announcing the results at Decanter's stand, Sarah Kemp, Decanter publishing director, said 'it was a record year for Decanter and, in one of the toughest years the wine trade has ever known, we're thrilled with the result.

Decanter World Wine Awards Chairman Steven Spurrier said 'winning a silver medal in the Decanter World Wine Awards is the equivalent of winning a gold from other competitions. Our prestige goes before us.'
